

Action

Convene your partners and build partnership capacity

When convening your partners, you may need to set up some guidelines and define roles and responsibilities of the partners. It will be important to decide how often you will need to convene your partners (e.g., weekly, monthly, bi-monthly) and to develop channels of communication (e.g., e-mail, conference calls). You may also want to develop methods by which you can share the work of all the partners. By working with your partners, it can help to generate support and carry out intervention activities. For more information, see Building Partnership Capacity in Partnerships.

Revisit your goals and objectives

Discuss the goals and objectives of your intervention. You may want to revisit your logic model to ensure that all of your goals and objectives are being met. You may need to revisit your intervention strategies that you have prepared to make sure that they are in line with your goals and objectives. Work with your partners to generate support and carry out intervention activities.

Enhance your community capacity and obtain needed resources

Once you have begun your intervention activities, you may discover that there are additional resources or costs that were not included in your original plan. It will be important to track these as part of your process evaluation. There should be a process for keeping track of resources, reporting to your partners about what has been used and what is still available.

Implement your intervention activities

- Contact media outlets

Keep your contact brief, simple, and focused on specific objectives. Make it easy for the media representatives to understand your messages and how you want them presented. When possible, develop a personal relationship with media representatives to increase chances for ongoing coverage of your messages. Be sure to follow up after your initial contact and keep a record of previous media coverage to share with media representatives to enhance your credibility. Use of controlled media outlets makes it easier to estimate the level of response to the campaign or promotion.

- Share your media messages

Deliver message to media in person, or follow-up by telephone to assure that the message was received. If there are several different messages over a period of several weeks, deliver each separately or follow-up by telephone to assure subsequent messages don't get lost. Be sure to include items in your baseline and follow-up evaluation materials regarding your campaign messages. This will help you and your partners determine if your messages are reaching your population and are having an effect.

- Revisit your timeline and roles and responsibilities

As you convene your partners and work on implementing your intervention activities, it will be helpful to revisit your timeline and the roles and responsibilities that you outlined in the preparation stage to ensure that you are accomplishing all that you set out to do. You may need to revise your timeline and roles and responsibilities as you encounter barriers and challenges.

Respond to barriers

Since you have already identified the barriers in the preparation phase, it is time to make sure that you have addressed these barriers. It may also be helpful when considering your evaluation methods, to consider process evaluation methods (See Evaluation for more information). This will help you to track your barriers as well as your action steps throughout your intervention planning process. By tracking your barriers, it can help you to not only to avoid similar problems in the future, but may also help others in your field doing similar work.

Collect your evaluation data

Collect your baseline evaluation measures. Be aware that you may need to incorporate additional evaluation measures in your follow-up evaluation materials. For example, in your baseline evaluation you may not ask about exposure to campaign messages, as your intervention has not been implemented at that time, but message exposure would be an evaluation measure you would want to capture at the end of your intervention.

Interpret and Summarize your findings

Once you have collected your evaluation data it is important to share your evaluation findings with your partners as well as others in the community. It is helpful to do this throughout the intervention so you can make “mid-course adjustments” rather than just at the end of the intervention. In addition, by reviewing your evaluation data at regular intervals you will be able to determine if your evaluation methods are enabling you to collect the types of data you need to evaluate your intervention. You may want to work with evaluation experts and ask them to help you to interpret and summarize the findings in a way that is accessible to multiple audiences.

Share your work with the population

Follow up with your media representatives and let them know how successful the campaign has been in the community as a way to keep your message grabbing the attention of community members. You may also consider presenting at conferences locally or nationally to let others know of your successes and challenges. Getting the word out is key to improving the interventions over time.

The following questions have been provided to help guide the discussion you have with your partners about sharing your work with others:

- What is the goal of sharing our work? What action do we want others to take?

- Which group needs to take action right now? Which group is the primary audience at this moment?
- What does this audience care about? What values do we share with this audience?
- What is our message to this audience? What do they need to hear to take action?
- What media outlets does our audience follow? Which newspapers do they read? Which radio stations do they listen to? Which TV newscasts do they watch?
- Are there reasons to be cautious about how we frame our messages? Are there any potential negative impacts from our partners? Our funders? The intended users of our programs?